

SMART WEARABLES TO BUY OR NOT TO BUY?

Paromik Chakraborty

I recently invested in a fitness band, which has made me conscious about my lifestyle choices more than ever. It doesn't limit to the number of hours I work out, but rather extends to how I eat and what I eat. It helps me to decide between taking the elevator or the stairs. It makes me realise that just like each drop of water counts, each calorie matters. The result is amazing! I feel better, energetic and positive than ever before.

Sheer love for my fitness band led me to explore other such smart wearables available in the market. I was astonished at the options available, ranging from smart yet beautiful jewellery pieces to feature-packed watches and stud bands.

Smartwatches (Image source: <https://cdn.pocket-lint.com>)

A handful of smart wearables (Image source: <http://duuro.net>)

A new way to look at time

With the launch of Motorola 360 followed by Apple Watch and Samsung's smart gear, a new wave of innovation is sweeping the watch market. These smartwatches with a touch screen allow you to not only manage your time smartly but also read e-mails and access important apps.

With the watch market abuzz over such offerings from tech companies, watch brands like Tag Heuer, Guess and our own homegrown Titan have also come up with a range of fashionable smart watches. Designer brands are also following suit.