Customs duty raised on some finished electronic items

The Indian government has raised customs duty on various electronic products including mobile phones, microwave ovens and cameras to boost local manufacturing and create jobs. The increase in customs duty will give local manufacturers a cost advantage over imports. However, it will not impact imports from countries such as Thailand and Malaysia, with which India has free trade agreements.

Customs duty has been increased by up to ten per cent, as per a notification issued by the Central Board of Excise and Customs. While it has been increased by five per cent on items such as mobile phones, video recording devices, electricity meters and digital cameras, it has been raised by ten per cent on items like microwave ovens, lamps and lighting fixtures.

Currently, these items attract a flat ten per cent basic customs duty (BCD) in addition to integrated GST. It is the BCD that gives a tariff edge to local manufacturing as a cut in GST rate will equally benefit both imports and local production.

Foreign Trade Policy helping industry

According to ELCINA, the Foreign Trade Policy after mid-term review is geared towards promoting exports very aggressively (with a target of $900 billion by 2020) and supports manufacturing with a focus on MSME and labour-intensive sectors. It has increased the Merchandise Export from India Scheme (MEIS) benefit for majority of the sectors and allocated ₹ 3690 million incentive for electronics and telecom.

Under the policy, supplies of goods and services to SEZs will attract no GST. Import of second-hand goods for repair, refurbishing, re-conditioning or re-engineering has been made free. GST has also been abolished for transfer and sale of these scrips. Also, there is an across-the-board increase of 2 per cent in existing MEIS for exports by MSMEs/labour-intensive industries. Round-the-clock customs clearance facility has been extended at 19 sea ports and 17 air cargo complexes.
