Reliance Retail outlets and others who support Jio payments accept Jio Money via QR code, or simply through the merchant's phone number. Online sites, including BookMyShow, Yatra and Burp, accept payments through Jio Money wallet.

Jio Money has a feature that lets you transfer money from the wallet to a linked bank account. However, due to regulations set by Reserve Bank of India (RBI), this feature may not be available for all users from the start.

Google Tez

Using UPI, Google's payment app for India, Tez transfers money directly from or to a linked bank account, omitting the necessity of opening a separate e-wallet. A UPI PIN is generated during registration, which is needed for the transactions.

Google Tez brings an interesting feature called Cash Mode. It requires two working smartphones, with Tez configured in both, to be near each other, one as the payer (swipe up to Pay) and the other as the payee (swipe down to Receive). Using a technology called Audio-QR, the two devices can recognise each other using ultrasonic sound patterns and initiate the transaction. This feature is instantaneous and very handy for money transactions without revealing any kind of information related to bank details. The application can be locked separately using a PIN, pattern or biometrics (fingerprint). Tracking down transaction history is simple. It is stored in a conversation-like interface.
