For excessive travellers, the saying “Less is More” holds true. I have benefitted so much from it—especially, ever since I chose a smart bag as my travel companion. My smart bag has all the essentials, magical ways to create extra space, an inbuilt GPS tracker, USB charging ports, smart and secure finger-sensing locks, and solar-powered batteries. To top it all, it looks great, and is completely durable.

Raden A22 is one among my favourite smart bags because in addition to the above-mentioned features, it has an app that, when connected with Bluetooth, can even help you track the bag. Barracuda is another favourite from the list. In addition to being traceable, it comes with a stand that can be opened up to act as a table enabled with charging points.

While budget travellers are mostly dependent on the available online tools, luxury travel space gives a whole gamut of gadgets to explore. Many compact, lightweight and powerful versions of cameras, tabs, phones and portable chargers—the most significant being smart travel accessories—are available in the market. Anker and Iceworks are my must-have power banks. With massive 10,000mAh capacity, these support my workload for extended periods successfully.

Security procedures at airports have changed. At various European airports, passengers no longer have to wait in queues during peak hours because the security checking is technologically managed. There are human scanners that take no longer than three seconds to check one person. These check a person front and back, scanning a complete 360 degrees in almost one tenth of the time taken by an individual staff.

Noise-cancelling earphones from Ethymotic let me enjoy my favourite music amidst the noisy crowd. This arbitrary quality makes them one of the most treasured travel gadgets. Adaptor plugs and Kindle close the smart traveller technology list for me.

Smartwatches are another must-have accessory. Being an ardent Apple user, I always count on my Apple Watch as my backup mechanism. To take home amazing memories, I carry my Canon EOS 750D DSLR to shoot pictures and videos. EFY
