

WHEN TECHNOLOGY AND FASHION BLEND

Neha De

Until a few years ago, wearable devices—or simply wearables—were not considered wearable by the fashion-conscious, as these lacked panache. The lines between the two are, however, getting blurred every day. Gone are the days of bulky and bland-looking smartwatches and fitness trackers. Now, the fashionista in you does not have to sacrifice style for convenience and functionality. Presented in this article are a few such new-age wearables.

Wearable jewellery

Mira. A wearable bracelet for women, Mira is devoted to giving a simple, personal and motivational fitness experience with style. The accompanying iPhone/Android app, Boosts, delivers motivational messages throughout the day. It also handles basics like tracking steps, calories, elevation and distance covered.

Mira smart bracelet works well with any fashion look and wrist size. You can also clip the tracker to your t-shirt or tuck it in your pocket. Made from stainless steel, it comes in brushed gold and midnight purple colour variants and three sizes (petite, small and medium).

Bellabeat Leaf. Bellabeat Leaf's health-tracking technology connects your body and mind, allowing you to reach your full potential. It helps you track your daily activity, sleep, mindfulness and menstrual cycles. It tracks your body movements during the day, from doing yoga to riding a horse, and guides and teaches you how to train your mind with personalised meditations. The Leaf can be worn as a necklace or a brooch.

Mira fits right in with your jewellery collection

Bellabeat Leaf is designed to create healthy habits by giving reminders at the same time every day

Gemio. Gemio smart-band connects you to music, friends and sports. It features 24 LEDs with millions of possible colours that can light up in rhythm to the music, or be controlled by you, or by a DJ at a club