See Sound Live app allows the deaf to speak

4S Medical Research has partnered with CouthIT to launch an innovative app called See Sound Live. It is a new way to learn how to speak for hearing- and speech-impaired children and adults who have had limited or no success with hearing aids, or cochlear implants, or speech therapy, and who currently rely only on sign language. See Sound Live allows them to try to speak new sounds, starting with basic sounds like Aa, Ee, Oo, etc and then move onto more complex sounds like Oi, Aiee and so on. The app also gives users feedback on how well they are doing with articulation tips and volumetric feedback. By practicing these new sounds, users are able to improve their performance in uttering these sounds one by one over time. Although simplistic in design, See Sound Live uses a child's ability to process visual signals in attempting to speak.

Firefox Send for private file-sharing

Firefox Send lets users share file sizes up to 1GB instantly. While sharing, it gives the option of setting expiration, that is, number of downloads and number of days. Users can also protect the file with a passcode to transfer it securely. After the file is uploaded, the app gives the link to share, which then allows other users to download that file. Currently, sign up is free and the app allows sharing files of up to 2.5GB.

WiFiman, an app made for the Wi-Fi modem

WiFiman examines all nearby Wi-Fi and Bluetooth networks and lets the user know which ones have the best connection and speeds. The user can also locate a much less crowded channel for good bandwidth. Also, it provides a list of devices connected to the user's Wi-Fi network and lets him or her know if any unknown device is using the Wi-Fi. The user can also test Wi-Fi speeds, for which the app gives detailed results.

Zoho Show helps create presentations from a phone

Zoho Show lets users create professional-looking presentations right from a phone. The app has several templates, and it is simple and easy to use. Users can find usual formatting options like alignment and font selection, among others. They can also collaborate with their team members on Zoho Show Slides. Zoho Show helps with casting the presentation from the cellphone directly with a supporting device on the network. Presentations made on Zoho Show can easily be synced to a laptop with a Zoho account. Presentations can also be exported as PDFs.
