BSNL to deploy 5G corridor in India by 2020

State-controlled Bharat Sanchar Nigam Ltd (BSNL) is planning to come up with a novel 5G Corridor starting from New Delhi's Lutyens' area as one of the use-cases for newer technology, which is likely to make inroads by 2020 in India.

According to BSNL chairman Anupam Shrivastava, BSNL is planning the 5G corridor in New Delhi to showcase the possible use of new technology with the optimum data speed at 5G levels.

The corridor will start from Ministry of Communications premise or Sanchar Bhawan at Ashoka Road to BSNL headquarters at Janpath in New Delhi towards the Connaught Place market, which has a high footfall, enabling users to stay seamlessly connected with a high-speed data network.

Google identified as semiconductor technology leader in data centre space

Google, Amazon, Xilinx and Micron are among the world's leading semiconductor companies best placed to succeed in the data centre space in the next two to five years, according to GlobalData, a leading data and analytics company. Data centres is one of the top ten themes that will impact the semiconductor sector, alongside high-performance computing, artificial intelligence (AI), ambient commerce, autonomous vehicles, industrial Internet, gaming, 5G and geopolitics.

Cyrus Mewawalla, head of thematic research, GlobalData, says, "Data centre developments are important for the semiconductor sector due to the global growth in demand for computing power. The need to analyse and process dramatically increasing volumes of data—much of it unstructured—is, in turn, driving demand for computer memory."

NTPC expands its solar capacity

In line with its aim to diversify its energy mix to include renewable sources of power generation, NTPC
