Daily routines and schedules have become extremely hectic and, hence, it is important to maintain proper diet and physical fitness. Perfect fitness can help people get rid of mental stress, but to maintain that by hitting the gym or yoga classes on a daily basis is a difficult task for many.

Cheaper Internet tariffs (mobile and broadband) and smartphones have made scores of impossible tasks possible. It has also given high-end fitness solutions in the form of apps—many of which also include live fitness training sessions with high-profile fitness gurus. Many fitness apps are available for free, while others are chargeable, and are available for both Android and iOS devices. However, having fitness apps on your device alone cannot make you lean and fit, but these can surely guide you on the best possible way to get back on the fitness track.

Fitness apps and gadgets have become extremely popular among sports persons. Their training sessions are also dependent on such apps and devices because these help them be more effective and physically fit, in addition to assisting them in identifying the amount of calories burned. For example, RunKeeper and Google Fitness apps are quite reliable options.

With the help of the free RunKeeper app, you can track your pace, measure workout distance, chart weight loss, crush training
