RadioShack to survive under new owner

RadioShack, American chain of wireless and electronics stores, will live on after an affiliate of Kensington Capital Holdings, a family office based in the suburbs of Boston family office, agreed to assume ownership of it.

Kensington had made a $23 million loan to RadioShack after it exited its first bankruptcy two years ago, and secured a deal with US wireless carrier Sprint Corp to co-brand 1400 stores.

Kensington plans to license the 96-year-old brand back to General

Wireless—the bankrupt company that does business as RadioShack.

Sony searching for the next hits

After five years of brutal restructuring, Sony is back on solid financial footing and coming out with new products. Among the new products are Aromatic digital smell dispenser, AeroSense self-flying drones and a collection of tech-infused accessories called 'wena.' These gadgets are being developed under the Seed Accelerator Program, started by chief executive officer Kazuo Hirai to encourage invention and risk-taking.

In fact, the company has allowed more than 1600 of its employees in Japan to put their day jobs on hold to pitch new ideas. The most promising ones have led to the creation of twelve new products.

Schneider Electric sets up solar plant at its Vadodara facility

Schneider Electric has set up a 720kWp solar power project at its manufacturing facility in Vadodara, Gujarat. The solar project, built on a rooftop area of 6000 square metres, covers almost 45 per cent of the total factory load and will produce over 1.05 million units of electricity per year, which would help cut power costs by as much as 20-25 per cent annually. Further, Schneider Electric will be able to cut its carbon dioxide emissions by 1018 tonnes per year, which is equivalent to planting 50,000 trees.
