

India's Electrification Dream Rides On Getting Multiple Pieces Right

Instead of focusing on electric cars, India seems to be focusing on manufacturing electric two- and three-wheelers so far. But what are the hurdles being faced in selling these vehicles, which formed just one percent of the overall vehicle sales last fiscal year? And, more important, how to overcome the hurdles and make use of the opportunity? Read on to find out

Siddha Dhar

The electric boom has taken the world by storm. Automotive companies are scampering to change their business model to suit the new disruption. At this crucial cusp of the mobility revolution, experts believe that India has found its champion in the race—the electric two-wheeler.