

STRATEGY: MY STORY

after completing his engineering and works full-time with Mahesh.

Mahesh is also a happy grandfather of three grandchildren, all boys—two from his son and one from his daughter. He says, “It is a well-knit small family. My family was always a great support for me. I remember, when I started my entrepreneurial journey leaving my job at IOCL, my daughter was seven years old, and my son was only five years old. So, they have seen me working. They have grown with my philosophy. Thus, they can understand my values. They are very much part of it.”

Mahesh would like to give back to society through his innovations and initiatives aligned with sustainable development goals. In the coming days, he would like to continue with the same. He discloses, “I will be very happy if people can save energy and drink good water by leveraging our innovations. Today climate change is causing more serious challenges to human beings than it was a few years back. I would like to contribute more to solve those challenges.”

Besides business work and family time, Mahesh is an avid bridge player. He represented IOCL and won quite a few bridge tournaments on behalf of IOCL. He says, “I was a very vicious player. I played in international tournaments several times, but I am not getting enough time to play bridge since I started Kent.”

While discussing strategic decision-making at different phases of his life, Mahesh mentions meditation as another passion of his life that helps him in strategic thinking and decision-making. He is an active follower of the Art of Living philosophy and is inspired by the vision of its founder, His Holiness Sri Sri Ravi Shankar. He says, “I met him in 1996. Since then, I have been practicing his philosophies. It helped me to keep my mind free and peaceful.

Unless your mind is in a peaceful state, you cannot make good decisions quickly.”

He advises, “My message to young entrepreneurs would be that the time has come to have dreams. Unless you dream, you cannot take impactful action. So, you should have big dreams. Nobody can stop you as dreams have no limitations. The most important thing to be successful in life is to believe in your dreams and persist with your beliefs. So, if you take these actions, nobody can stop you from achieving what you want to do.” EFY
