

The 3 Attributes To Improve VISIBILITY IN NOISY MARKET

In his previous article the author explained a three-step process for predictable sales. One of the crucial frameworks for that was Zeroth Moment of Truth, aka ZMoT. But here's the challenge that he sees with most entrepreneurs

ANAND TAMBOLI
is a serial entrepreneur,
speaker, award-winning author, and an emerging-technology
thought leader

Every time I meet an entrepreneur, I'm amazed by the confidence and tenacity they exude. Most of them are quite excited to tell me about their great idea or how their product is unique. They know what they are doing, and they are very clear on why they are doing it. And in most cases, they are the best of the bunch. But there is something much bigger at stake. And here is that.

Your idea may be one of the best, but are you visible enough to make it work in reality? You know what you are doing, and you know why you are doing that. But if nobody knows about it, what is the point? You may be a great dancer, but what is the point if you are performing in the dark and no one sees it?

Like it or not, this is painful. It means you can spend many years of your life building a great product and delivering awesome services without reaching the payoff it truly deserves. On the other hand, you will often find another product or service, which is suboptimal compared to what you are doing, and yet they can make the most out of it. Why?

You see, visibility and attention are highly valued commodities these days. More visibility, of the right kind, can ensure more attention, which then can help you generate more business.

Think about your competition or businesses you look up to. Can you recognise how visible they are and how their visibility has created a positive loop for their business? It is mainly because more visibility means more